Re: ADM File No. 2006-16

I am writing in this matter to make a comment on MCR 6.302 (C) on judicial involvement in the plea bargaining process rendering the accused guilty plea involotary. This rule should change and people v. cobbs should be overruled people v. cobbs 443 mich 276, 505 NW2d 208 (1993).

Judicial involvement is unconstitutional and leades to defendants to enter involotary and coerced pleas with the trial court judge.

I raised this issue in my appeal and the Michigan courts denied review on the question presented. Currently this issue is before the federal court in the Eastern District of Michigan See Bridges v. Wolfenbarger Case No. 2:06-CV-10566. This issue is important because by pleading guilty in Michigan you lose your appeal by right and effective assistance of appellant counsel so you can't enforce your right to withdraw your plea if the trial court denied your request and the appeal courts can simply denied leave to appeal and people v. cobbs remains good law. Times have changed and the cobb's rule must be overruled.
