Thank you for the revision as suggested. I believe that the concept of a "proper question" is not well defined. People ask many interesting things during voir dire that create a relationship between the questioner and the panel. I believe that strong deference should be given to asking questions desired. Further, the next question often builds off of the prior answer, so simply submitting questions is not really the most effective tool. I believe that attorneys should always be allowed to ask questions. Therefore, I encourage you to strike (C)(2)(b) and leave (a) as a continuation.
