Detroit Legal News: High court finds defendant’s retro plea a tough sell

“Can a common practice in criminal defense trigger constitutional protections when it’s suddenly changed? The justices of the U.S. Supreme Court didn’t seem to think so, at least in the context of Metrish v. Lancaster. In that case, the court is being asked to decide whether a ruling by the Michigan Supreme Court abolishing the diminished-capacity defense can be applied retroactively to a defendant without violating his due process rights.”

SBM Blog: "The Party's Over" For Michigan Supreme Court?
“For Michigan Supreme Court watchers, yesterday's prevailing theme turned out to be the role of partisan politics on the Court. The whole Court, a number of former justices, and scores of supporters of the Michigan Supreme Court Historical Society turned out to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the Society at a luncheon at which they heard former justice Thomas Brennan and Cooley Law School founder deliver remarks entitled "The Party's Over."
The Michigan Supreme Court is corrupted by "dark money," secrecy and ideology. So contends former Supreme Court Chief Justice Elizabeth Weaver, a Republican from Glen Arbor, who's co-authored a book in which she alleges Michigan's highest court often rules on behalf of special interest groups that bankroll judges' election campaigns, as opposed to the merits of cases.”
